

OVERVIEW

North Carolina will face many challenges in the coming years, challenges that will require the emergence of a new generation of leaders with the knowledge, skills, and understanding to bring together public and private institutions to solve key problems.

Underwritten by the E.A. Morris Charitable Foundation and the John William Pope Foundation, the Morris Fellowship program encourages committed, diverse and principled North Carolinians to pursue greater leadership roles within their professions and communities. Morris Fellows explore the dynamics of public policy, principles of individual liberty and free enterprise, the role of private and nonprofit institutions in a free society, and the role of citizen leaders in a hands-on manner. Through the Fellowship program, these committed individuals gain the knowledge, skills and understanding necessary to become leaders in business, nonprofit, education, government, and other areas of public service.

The program is named in honor of Mr. Edwin A. Morris, one of the founding fathers of the North Carolina conservative movement. Under the four-decade leadership of E.A. Morris, Greensboro-based Blue Bell, Inc. became the world's largest manufacturer of work and recreational clothing. In the spirit of Edwin Morris, the Morris Fellowship program combines practical skills with knowledge and theory in communication, government, ethics, economics, and political philosophy. Through these experiences, Morris Fellows grow in their ability to become leaders in diverse areas of North Carolina's public and private sectors.

ABOUT THE FELLOWSHIP

The John Locke Foundation invites any eligible North Carolina resident to apply to the E.A. Morris Fellowship for Emerging Leaders.

Fellows must commit to a yearlong program of activities designed to examine, develop, and enhance their leadership skills. The Fellowship commitment includes a local community effort of each participant's choosing. Fellows are required to report on the progress they are making with this project over the course of the program. Once chosen, Fellows are obligated to attend three retreats that will be held in different locations across the state. In addition, Fellows must attend four other approved seminars or conferences sponsored by think tanks, universities, trade associations, civic clubs, and other groups. Candidates should avoid creating conflicting commitments with concurrent professional or personal development programs.

The John Locke Foundation is making a substantial commitment to each class of Fellows in its role of administering the E.A. Morris program. The Morris Fellows program requires no fees of its participants. All E.A. Morris Fellowship fees and expenses, including required retreats, events and travel, will be paid through the John Locke Foundation.

OUR PHILOSOPHY

We want to equip Morris Fellows with the ability to understand, respect and appreciate the opinions of others in their community. Part of the Fellowship mission is to prepare emerging leaders to examine and evaluate other points of view.

In line with this mission, learning experiences for Fellows include sessions on constitutional government, political philosophy, public speaking and debate, economic principles, history of economic thought, charity and the social sector and the public policy process. These experiences provide Fellows with the tools they need to advance the ideals of individual liberty, free enterprise and limited government.

To prepare for community and civic engagement, Fellows apply the lessons discussed in retreats to practical situations, using techniques that transform ideas into practical skills.

The Morris Fellowship is unique in that it combines leadership training with John Locke's philosophy of solving problems through private, voluntary action rather than reliance on government.

PROGRAM DETAILS

The E.A. Morris Fellowship program brings together several different programming elements—participation in intensive seminars and leadership training exercises, attendance at public policy events throughout the year, communication among participants via the Fellowship web tools, and building knowledge through directed readings and information.

The Fellowship develops further understanding of the philosophical and political issues surrounding such topics as:

- 1) Modern electoral politics,
- 2) Spotting opportunities for leadership in a local community,
- 3) Ethics for developing leadership,
- 4) Elements of fundraising and philanthropy,
- 5) Program planning and evaluation,
- 6) Economic analysis and how to use it,
- 7) Speaking in public and in the media,
- 8) Emotional Intelligence and Organization Effectiveness.
- 9) Finding and cultivating like-minded volunteers, donors, and activists.

To participate in the E.A. Morris Fellowship program, each Fellow is required to attend a prescribed number of special events throughout the Fellowship year. These are:

LEADERSHIP RETREATS (3). Throughout the year, three mandatory leadership retreats are held at different locations around the state. The retreats are the main mechanism by which the E.A. Morris Fellowship will build the human capital of the conservative movement and of North Carolina as a whole.

Each retreat further develops the individual Fellow's leadership skills, and is designed to correlate with the Fellow's selected project goals. JLF staff oversee retreat sessions, serve as panelists to debate issues, and organize "evening chats" on public policy and other issues.

LOCAL FORUMS (4). Fellows must also attend four events/conferences over the course of the year. Universities, civic groups, think tanks, political groups, nonprofits, chambers of commerce, or other organizations typically sponsor these events. Fellows choose from among an approved list of forums, and may recommend events for addition to the list. The common denominator for these events is subject matter that broadens Fellows' minds in areas of public policy, leadership, or issues facing North Carolinians. Fellows offer commentary for each symposium on the Fellowship website.

FINAL PRESENTATION. The Fellows' project should be the focus of their yearlong leadership effort. This project may be a volunteer effort, nonprofit group, business-led task force, or public-sector undertaking in which Fellows develop a team and work with others in a leadership role. Throughout the Fellowship year, participants gain the tools they need to address local problems and to attain their objectives.

As Fellows reach leadership project milestones, documentation of their work should be shared with their Fellowship Class on the web. Appropriate web sites have been created for use as a reference and resource for current and prospective Fellows.

The Fellows' commitment and hard work are formally recognized at the Hello/Farewell gala.
